INTRODUCTION

Cyberbullying is defined as the act of harassing another individual online messages, comments, or any other form of communication that involves the internet. Cyberbullying is distinct from other forms of harassment in that it happens in a virtual space. However, it can have an enormous impact on a person's real-world life, often in more detrimental ways than traditional bullying.

INTRODUCTION

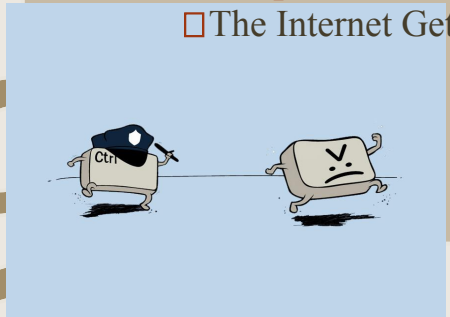

History of cyberbullying :

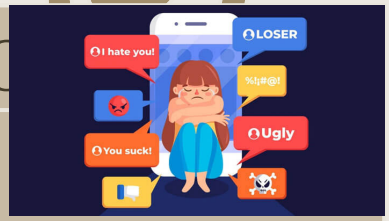

Traditional bullying forced its way onto the web in the 1990s with the advent of affordable personal computers. Since then, classmates (and even strangers) have subjected children and teens to cyberbullying in public chatrooms or on private messaging platforms. The web's anonymity provided the perfect cover for a user to harass or intimidate others without many repercussions.

Example :

- The Internet Gets Mobile(2000).

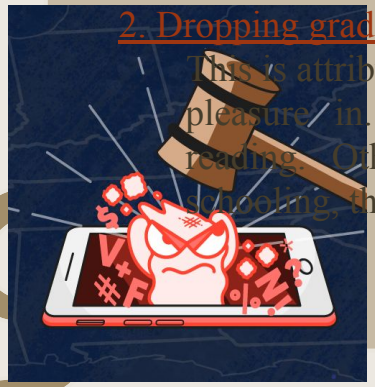

INTRODUCTIO

Effects of cyberbullying:

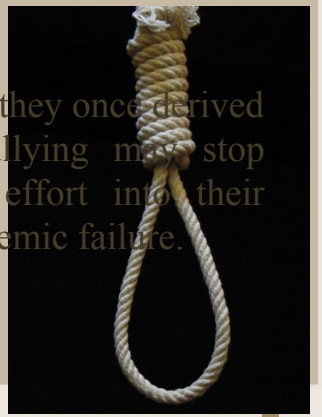

1.Depression:

Cyberbullying victims often fall prey to various conditions that are related to stress. Anxiety and depression are just a few of those conditions. When victims start losing confidence in themselves, it hurts their mental health.

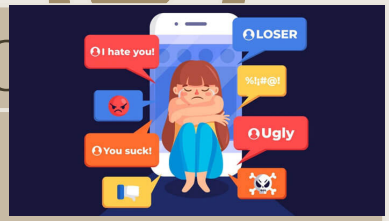

2. Dropping grades:

This is attributed to a loss of interest in activities they once derived pleasure in. Individuals experiencing cyberbullying may stop reading. Others may generally put in little effort into their schooling, thereby setting themselves up for academic failure.

INTRODUCTIO

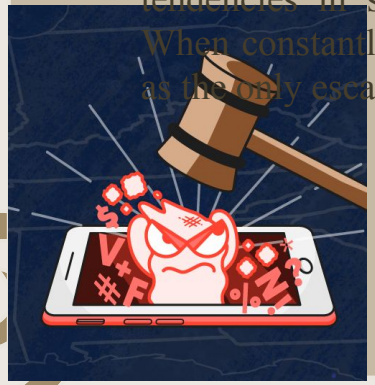

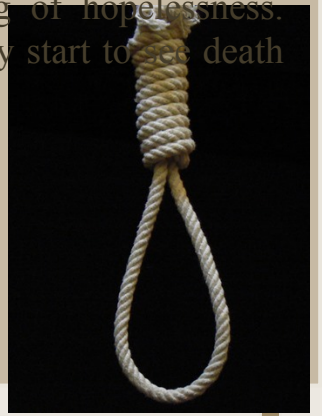

3.Suicidal Inclinations:

One of the causes of bullying online is when a person tries to get revenge for facing harassment. Sadly, vengeance does not help. It only leads to more cyberbullying.

Research indicates that cyberbullying may encourage suicidal tendencies in some victims. It brings a feeling of hopelessness. When constantly harassed online, individuals may start to see death as the only escape.

CONCLUSION

All roles are complementary to each other and lead to a positive result if they are presented appropriately between different segments.

Cyberbullying is the unacceptable face of new technology, and we need concerted action across society to address it. Schools must play a key role, and this new guidance will help them to identify and tackle instances of cyberbullying more effectively.

All roles are complementary to each other and lead to a positive result if they are presented appropriately between different segments.
